THE THINKING MUSLIM

The Thinking Muslim's first documentary follows life before, during and after the Syrian revolution through the people who lived it.

In Damascus, Aleppo, Homs, Hama and Idlib, civilians describe life under Assad and how it changed when the revolution reached their streets.

A shopkeeper recalls the brutality he saw under the regime. Doctors and teachers describe how the upheaval reached their working lives. A writer who used allegory speaks about working to resist Assad's injustice.

As the violence intensifies, a mother recounts witnessing a chemical attack, while people who joined the resistance explain what drew them in.

The film travels through the tunnels beneath Jobar, along the Idlib front lines and into Sednaya Prison, where Ali and Ghousson's son Yusuf was murdered.

After Assad's fall, Syrians speak about what liberation has made possible and what it will take to rebuild after years of war.
